...and 60p for riding his bicycle to the station

Pennies: Rob Wilson

A TORY minister yesterday defended claiming 9p on expenses for a 350-yard car journey.

Rob Wilson was paid the money to reimburse him for driving '0.2 miles' from his house to visit a constituent in the next street.

He also claimed 60p towards the upkeep of his bicycle after riding it to the station and back.

The minister for civil society – who gets a salary of £89,400 – said he had to keep careful records as he makes a lot of short trips. 'I do use my car to cut down the travelling time so I can visit as many constituents and local organisations in the time available,' the married father-of-four said.

'Many of my journeys are over fairly short distances of a few miles

Beautiful blends

IF you can hear a soft coo-ing, it's just us lusting after Smeg's pastel blue blender, a new colour for the range. Oh, and we're getting excited about the other new pastel shades that'll be out in October. We're almost wishing the summer away to get our hands on them.

Turn your home into a yurt

FELT'S gorgeously coloured rugs caught our eye this week. They're known traditionally as shyrdaks and are made in the Tien Shan mountains of Kyrgyzstan. Just as the local people used to line their yurts with the bright woven fabrics, now you can line your home. The only trouble will be choosing which colour combo to go for. From £300, feltrugs.co.uk

A splash in the pan

WHAT do you get when you cross a top chef and a fragrance brand? We thought something cheesy but the new fragrance from Jason Atherton left us smiling. A limited edition from Boadicea and Jason's lifestyle company Four, at £249 it's rather top-end but if you like a good cologne, it's worth a sniff.
